The purpose of this Town Hall is to When a Baltimore-area startup needs a corporate name check or a filing status update, the clock can feel like a courtroom drama. A few well-placed preparations—knowing the exact entity number, having the right spellings, and using Maryland's online tools—turn a potentially slow, paper-laden process into a swift, almost painless transaction. The Maryland Secretary of State maintains a public index of every corporation, LLC, partnership, and nonprofit operating under state law. Think of it as the state's official ledger; anyone can query it, but the depth of information and the speed of the return depend on how clean the request is. For everyday entrepreneurs, this means treating the search like any other official form: double-check, be precise, and use the right channel. Every filing is anchored to an entity's specific number (the Maryland Entity ID). If you already have this eight-digit code, the search engine skips the name-matching routine and delivers the record instantly. When the ID isn't handy, pull the full legal name from your formation documents, and confirm spelling—including punctuation such as & or Co. to avoid false-negative results. The state's free, web-based portal (business.maryland.gov) offers two pathways: a basic name-availability check and a detailed entity search. Create an account once; the system remembers your last queries, letting you revisit a filing with just a few clicks. For the most efficient search: Log in early. A logged-in session bypasses the captcha that slows anonymous users. Choose "Advanced Search." This lets you filter by entity type, status (active, dissolved), and filing year.
