This structure meant that a single defeat could be costly, and goal difference became a critical tiebreaker. Teams that managed to score early and maintain strong defenses had a strategic advantage. Mexico finished at the top of Group A with an unbeaten record, finishing 2â€™0â€™0 and outscoring opponents 5â€™0. Canada, despite a narrow 1â€™0 win over the United States in the final fixture, secured the second spot by virtue of a superior goal difference, highlighting how every goal mattered. In Group B, Costa Rica and the United States locked the top spot with identical records. The tiebreakerâ€™goal differenceâ€™favored Costa Rica (4â€™0), granting them a direct berth. The United States, however, had a strong offensive display and will face Costa Rica in the final playoff for the third automatic spot. Comparatively, smaller CONCACAF nations struggled to keep pace. Teams like Panama and Jamaica finished without any wins, underscoring the widening gap between the regionâ€™s elite and developing football programs. The 2021 CONCACAF World Cup qualifying campaign wrapped up with a final standings table that clarified which North and Central American teams will secure their spots in Qatar. Across the region, the race for the top two automatic berths and the thirdâ€‘place playâ€‘in spot was decided by a mixture of points, headâ€‘toâ€‘head records, and goal difference. In 2021, CONCACAF introduced a streamlined format for the third round of the qualifiers. Six teams that advanced from the second round were split into two groups of three. Each team played the others in its group home and away, giving a maximum of four matches per team. The group winners earned direct qualification to the 2022 FIFA World Cup, while the secondâ€‘place teams entered a final playoff against the winner of a fourthâ€‘place match from the same round.
