after the first three correct entries. Once activated, the algorithm highlights the next word that can be solved without guessing. The tool draws from the same database the editorial team uses, guaranteeing that the revealed answer fits the clue's nuance. The process is: Because the hint always points to the most logical next step, the puzzle's flow remains intact, and you avoid the temptation to guess wildly. Jenna, a marketing analyst in Washington, typically reads the crossword while riding the Metro. She used to spend the entire commute, but after adopting the hint routine, she now finishes the puzzle in under five minutes. The key to her success was limiting the hint to once per grid, forcing her to still engage with the clues while still benefiting from the automated nudge. For grids that lock the hint feature after two uses, or for solvers who prefer a completely manual approach, several reputable resources exist:
