to give the region broader representation and to reward the growth of football across North America, Central America, and the Caribbean. Automatic qualification is limited to the hosts, so the United States, Canada, and Mexico are the only CONCACAF teams confirmed so far. The remaining spots are still up for grabs, and the qualifying calendar, set to begin in 2024, will determine the next three direct qualifiers and the playoff contender. FIFA introduced a multi-stage CONCACAF qualification system designed to balance competitive fairness with development opportunities. The format includes: First round: The lowest-ranked 30 teams play home-and-away ties, with 15 winners advancing. Second round: Those 15 join the next six highest-ranked teams (excluding the hosts) to form ten two-legged matches. Ten winners move forward.
