1, 1972, the numbers drawn that day reshaped the trajectories of thousands of men born between 1948 and 1952, determining who would be called to serve in Vietnam and who would continue civilian lives uninterrupted. Prior to 1972, the draft operated on a “first-come, first-served” system that favored those already enlisted or with deferments. The lottery was intended to inject impartiality by assigning each birth date a random number from 1 to 366; men with the lowest numbers were drafted first. This method aimed to quell accusations of bias and to give the public a tangible sense of fairness amid growing anti-war sentiment. Consider the experience of three typical 20-year-old men from Philadelphia, Detroit, and San Diego: Philadelphia, born March 15 (number 22) – Called in the first wave, he was shipped to basic training six weeks after graduation, postponing a scholarship to study engineering.
