Charting outcomes are organized by specialty, showing median and percentile ranges for USMLE Step 1 and Step 2 CK scores, number of research publications, and other key metrics. Unlike previous reports that merely listed average scores, the new charts present a color-coded heat map that instantly highlights the sweet spots for each program. For example, in internal medicine, the top 10% of matched applicants scored 228-240 on Step 1, while in orthopedic surgery the threshold climbs to 265-280. Applicants can now. Here are three concrete strategies that translate chart patterns into actionable choices: Target the Upper Quartile: If your Step 1 score falls within the 75th-85th percentile for your chosen specialty, focus on building a strong research portfolio or obtaining leadership roles that can boost your profile beyond raw numbers. Leverage Subspecialty Strengths: Many programs value specific sub-areas, such as pediatric cardiology or medical oncology. Use the chart's sub-specialty columns to identify programs that align with your interests and where your skills will stand out. Optimize Your Personal Statement: Programs often weigh the narrative around your motivations. The chart shows that applicants with statements addressing patient-centred care in rural settings have higher match rates for community hospitals. Tailor your narrative to the program's mission, using the chart's themes as a guide. If you're preparing for USMLE & Residency Match,
